Bringing Attention to the body
And to the Present Moment Establishing mindfulness
On your breath

Your Posture

Aware of Sensations

This is a way of reflecting on the suchness of things the way they are in the present moment not denying the reality of the present moment and not claiming it is something else

The Suchness of the present moment

Dat-dada in the pali language Isness, suchness

When the buddha referred to himself after his enlightenment It was as the the tagatha that which IS at this not a person not a story not a person with a history or a past with that that is present now or a personality that which is present now establishing this awareness the ability to open the mind And to be receptive

(pause)

attending to the present moment and the state of mind

the mood
And the quality of mind you can notice this happy, sad, expansive, contracted, indifferent, peaceful, excited just to observe it is like this it's suchness

This spacious expansive awareness you can go to the breath inhaling is like this Exhaling is like this

(pause)

you can focus on a particular thing not like analysis/analyzing it or judging just noticing paying attention to what which is the way it is in the present

Go to the top of the head and sweep thru the sensations there consciously noting the way they are the sensitive state of the body Maybe tingling - vibrating

Note the sensations that come into awareness Say when we are putting attention onto the top of the head the face, back of the neck

notice the mouth just where the upper lip is touching the lower lip then the corners of the mouth the right corner and then the left then going inside where the tongue is notice the experience of wetness (pause)
the saliva
(pause)

the tongue touching the teeth or the palate (pause)
Notice any tensions in your face This is a very sensitive area the eyes the ears nose, the tongue, the mouth, the brain

This is a very sensitive delicate thing this head putting it into conscious experience for what it is the sensitivity of it concentrate on the senses on the sensitivity on the feeling of it rather than what it looks like we identify very much with our face

Then the throat neck and throat and shoulders sweeping around these sensations the throat - What's that like?

(pause)
the hands just contemplate them right now just contemplate the tingling sensations in your hands. you can use your hands like a rosary Notice each finger noticing the tingling sensations at the tips of the fingers

It can very relaxing if you just meditate on the sensations in your hands.
(pause)
then Compare the right shoulder with the left shoulder I find that my left shoulder gets tight because I'm right handed I seem to create tensions in the left very quickly as soon as I bring attention to the to the left shoulder where those tensions are they seem to they seem to relax (pause)

Another good one to develop is the top of the head to the base of the spine.
Just think to yourself now go to the top of your head and then the base of the spine.

That distance

you can mindfully embrace that your spinal column kind of sweeping up and down your spinal column from the On top of the head neck down to the back in the space of the spine and then back up just see what happens as you just observe Think just that using the thought the top of the head base of the spine column bring your attention to that This becomes conscious

(pause)
notice your legs and feet where are your feet right now?
Where are my feet Notice if they are touching the left foot touching right foot (pause)
and then sweeping back up this whole body Front the feet to the top of their head Feeling this whole body Get a feel for the whole body as moment one intuitive experience like the silence and consciousness embracing, vibrating pulsating body this one thing.
(pause)
Relaxing for the sound of silence the cosmic hum the primordial cosmic sound kind of because it kind of permeates every cell of your body.
Spreading throughout the universe, infinite no boundaries
