The Role of A Teacher - Journal

Thu, 1/20 5:17PM • 2:36

SUMMARY KEYWORDS

teachings, teachers, talk, mooching, zhaan, practice, mooji, connect, guide, characterize, familiarity, spira, mindfulness, intimacy, rupert, relating, fact, ajahn, experience, easily

SPEAKERS

Andy McGuire

Andy McGuire

So this is a note on the role of a teacher and a question that comes up for a journaling practice which I am reading from this brings to mind several teachers that you respect and what are the key qualities that characterize their way of teaching and relating form informally to their students? So I think that I'll think of a couple. So one would be would be mooching, who who can easily guide us and actually even the other non dual teachers who can really guide us into connecting with just who we are. In a way that is really intimate, I believe. So that's one of the actually the one of the things about non dualism that's really great that we can connect with this so Rupert Spira talk does this and so does Mooji. Um, as far as Ajahn Pasanno is concerned has to do with his interest, intimacy, maybe a lot of the teachers intimacy with what they're doing with the teachings. So when he's talking about mindfulness of the body Yeah, in fact, all of the Zhaan says that way is their familiarity with practice, which is something I can I can definitely relate to that really having that confidence being a direct connection to their inner experience to connect with the teachings. So yeah, that's, that's definitely helpful for me. All right. Thanks.

Transcribed by https://otter.ai