

Speaker 1 - 00:00

So journal on who what day is this? It is June 9th of 2025. Just getting back from the camping trip in the desert with some of our quest folks and a couple themes I just want to document real quick. Number one would be high altitude adjustments. You know take I didn't start feeling well until the morning were leaving so day so we started we got the Thursday, Friday, Saturday so day Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday. So day four for me. So that's something I wanted to note. That's very interesting. Mind body very cranky, very easily tired at elevation were at 7,500ft but I got a little strong, I got stronger at least in the short time were there the morning of the fourth day some other reflections real quick.

Speaker 1 - 01:32

So also in terms of diet one thing is I don't necessarily need to have more caffeine, I'm fine or don't get headaches or whatever and actually one of the things that got me back to reflecting here was that I was just doing a little meditation, it was fine and then my central head problem came back into being but that maybe I could drink more water during the day and see if I my headaches diminished that way because I might be bringing my pain threshold in to a point where you. The. The what would be a minor problem is bigger because I'm slightly dehydrated that way.

Speaker 1 - 02:28

Was reading this weekend just a little bit on Saturday I'm reading this book More than Allegory by Bernard Cutsup and he's talking about the main theme being so far that we should not ignore myth which is basically any of the traditional writings. I'll just say Christian but they actually include all of the indigenous and all the other Native American various different traditions from past that set up myths to explain the world and that we live in. And then there's the non mythical ones which include Buddhism, Vedanta, etc. And that so they're bringing the more logical side. Although the key point here is it's not really logic and rationality it's that the non myth meaning not creating necessarily creating a God is a part of the quote religion.

Speaker 1 - 03:57

So but the whole point of it is that you have some belief because that belief is important and for in order for you to move forward to validate what whether it's true or not for this we're speaking of absolute truth.