So I'm here at my quest spot, second quest spot that I have ever went used, where my experience with Hamilton, who Hamilton is a lizard that hung out with me during my three days here, especially the last two. And I had a wonderful experience with him. He came and he revealed himself when I was resting in my tent. And he could peer into the tent and see me resting. And I saw him on the rock, hanging upside down, looking at me. And then he scurried up the thing. And then a little later that day he came down to the ground and sat three or four feet away from me at the most as I was under a shade under a tree. And he spent the rest of the afternoon with me there.

And in fact he was eating bugs and just sitting with me as I was sitting. It was awesome. And then that same evening, I don't know if that was the third evening or the second evening, I think it was the third evening, I was drumming the sun down and he came down from the rocks and he had a girlfriend that he had brought with him and they were both sitting there and they were listening to me as I drum the sun down. So one of the reflections I wanted to do this with this recording is just how sentient this lizard brained creature was with me. You know, sentient enough to come and get comfortable with me and to sit with me and to come and listen to me play music which, you know, I don't. May not even know it was music.

It wasn't music, it was just drumming. But he recognized me and knew it was okay because he kept coming back. So what about that in terms of consciousness?
