

Speaker 1 - 00:14

Need to have you here in person.

Speaker 2 - 00:16

Yeah, it is. It's. It's. It's so. You know, I'm so used to zoom meetings because I do it for my work and everything. And when you know the players, you know what you're doing, then, you know, you're talking business. It really. I mean, it's cool. I mean, a lot of guys don't even work. We don't have our cameras on anymore. We're so used to it. And. But when you're doing what we're doing, there's more that we're conveying body language, we're conveying emotions, and you don't necessarily need that, you know, in business, you know, but it's here. It's really. I mean, yeah, it's a huge. You know, we're human beings, and us being able to connect that way is. I think that's. That's what a lot of the world right now is having with the COVID thing.

Speaker 2 - 01:19

You know, we're not able touch each other, hug each other. And so there's a lot of people. If you don't. If you don't have any way of nourishing yourself, then replenishing yourself, then a lot of people don't have practices for coping skills for dealing with it, you know? So, yeah, I feel bad for the world. I actually been doing fine, you know, because I don't mind, you know, the solitude. I actually did feel a connection with you guys when I was on the big screen there. But it's sure much. It's really much nicer to be with you.

Speaker 1 - 02:22

Welcome back.

Speaker 2 - 02:23

Thank you. Thank you. Glad to see you guys again. I hope that you guys are hanging in there. Hanging in there, and hope that. We were just talking about it being good to be in person. I hope that you were. It wasn't too hard on you. Added a couple extra layers of. Of. I mean, you guys are here. It's not like you're running around to sit down and getting to see your families and all that stuff. Yeah, yeah. That's great. About fellowship, you know, so you guys are lucky. Yeah. I reflected on my. When I'm on my rehab fellowship. Yeah. It's. Try to. If I can give you any advice. You know, I said this to another. I've said this a couple times that I was on the floor with, like 50 other people, 60 other people, and I had this memory of.

Speaker 2 - 03:38

I mean, it was really. I mean, a lot of things we're doing in our lives are really tough. They're people that are Facing jail time, marriage breakups, you know, loss of their careers, everything they identified with. Right. And, you know, me too. I was. I came in with a divorce and blah, blah. So you get really close to people. But, you know, I remember there was one fellow I hung out with, and he was in love with his girl. And as soon as he got out, all he could think about was trying how he could get with her, right. And totally forgot about his sobriety. And so he was a tenderloin guy. And I remember helping him move. And, you know, then he's. He's lost. And then that was one.

Speaker 2 - 04:33

And then I used to go to aftercare in the city and we had a room. We had this big table of people. We'd all check in, you know, like we normally do. And week one was, you know, it's like, okay. But then week two, week three, whatever, as went on, people were starting to go back to their old behaviors, Living with their drug dealers, going to unsafe situations. You know what I mean? So if there's anything that I can. That I. As, you know, I try to get across to you that you guys have something on your own that you can hold on to, that you can use as a practice, as a way to insulate yourself because life is going to be happening. So if you can learn these skills of.

Speaker 2 - 05:28

I don't know how much they push AA or not, but it's sort of like rehab with fellowship. And some people, it's not for them. I have a daughter who. She's getting hit on the whole time that she's. Their meetings. And so it just drives young women away. Right. And so, yeah, so then people say it doesn't work for them, but it doesn't work for them because it's. Again, you're dealing with people, places and things, not putting our. Our hopes on the relationship or things going our way or not. Right. So this leads exactly into what I talk about anyway, that you have, you think, put your sobriety first, right. And try to navigate the difficult part of getting some semblance of a new life, because it'll be a new. Hopefully there's a new life when you.

Speaker 2 - 06:38

When you get out of here and you're a sober life, because, yeah, just going back is, you know, people go to rehabs over and over and over. And I know that's part of. I know that's part of recovery, you know, relapse, you know, but it doesn't have to be. And I'm holding on to my sobriety as strong as I can, because I feel, you know, you build up this momentum in your life. I've seen my daughter do this so many times. She'd build up her life, get it together, and then throw it right away and she's back where she was again. And then, you know, she's 30 now, so he's not 17 anymore. And so it doesn't get easier. You still have the same pressures of getting a career and getting, you know, relations. You know, you still have the same stuff going on.

Speaker 2 - 07:45

And you want. I want you guys to have some tools so that you are. You grow from what your experience is instead of not growing, right? And a lot of what I'm talking about is trying to be skillful with the way you look at life, your attitudes. Look for the solution within yourself, right? With how you approach your life to learn to go with the ups and downs and, you know, not get so elated on the ups and so low on the downs, you know, so that you can. I mean, it's okay. I'm not saying you're not zombies, for sure. I'm not a zombie. You guys know I'm not a zombie, okay? I'm full of life. But at the same time, you learn to mature emotionally, right?

Speaker 2 - 08:47

And you rely on that spiritual connection, that connection for you to be able to let go, right? Because this is all about letting go and learning to be in the flow of life. I talk about this over and over. Happiness is when you don't want to be anywhere doing anything else or. Okay with the way it is exactly right now, right? That brings a lot of joy and happiness, right? And it's when we're for wanting things to be different or wanting things to be a certain way, that then all of a sudden our joys goes away, right? Even the want to be happy drives joy away, happiness away, right? Because that desires not. It can be unhealthy, right? It's a needy desire instead of, you know, instead of a genuine authentic desire.

Speaker 2 - 09:58

And that's one of the things that sobriety helped me, is to learn to be authentic. You know, I don't know if you guys could think about when you were children, right, how you kind of. There was a certain freedom you felt at a certain point. And I always felt that was the genuine me, right? When I was free. So this authenticity, authentic being authentic, not being a hypocrite. I learned a new word from another person. There's this thing called imposter syndrome that we think that we're imposters. Pretending that we're trying to put a good front up in our life. Trying not to show fear. Right. Trying to pretend we're somebody that we, you know, instead of this authentic, just confidence in ourselves. And so I think that meditation is confidence, right?

Speaker 2 - 10:58

You learn to be confident and comfortable with who you are and how you are, knowing your buttons, your weaknesses. You're not lying to yourself. Right. This authenticity. So if you're not lying to yourself, you're not pretending, then you can open up to the world and accept it for the way it is. Right. Again. So this is why I will point out. I try to point out waking up. Waking up. Not trying to run away, not trying to disconnect. Facing life, allowing. There's an allowing. We have a tendency to push away things by this wanting or. Yeah, the striving. You don't necessarily have to strive, but there's this effortless striving that you learn to just to be. Right. This whole idea of being. But you have to pay attention to it because it's ignored most of the time.

Speaker 2 - 12:04

It's ignored because we still have that pull of wanting to be loved, wanting to be accepted, fitting in. Right? That's what's great with you guys. You guys are all the same here, right? You guys are on a similar journey. So there's camaraderie in that journey. And then when you get out in the street, then nature is there saying this. It's a little bit different. And it's not. I mean, meditation is. Meditation and life are the same thing. There's a teaching that I was just listening to. They were talking about it, like, being food. Food for our hearts, food for our minds. And just like you need food to be healthy and to be alive, you need meditate. You know, this meditation can actually help us to be. To. Yeah, it's food for our hearts and a presence in our life.

Speaker 2 - 13:12

And so it's really an important thing. Can be. It should be. So there's a lot of benefits of it. So I need this reminder because I, you know, I don't know about you. It's like, I have a job, and I get judged at jobs where I'm worried about being, you know, I'm getting older now that maybe I'm not as competitive as some of the other folks in there and wanting to succeed and do all that. And so I have the same fears and wants and worries that, you know, and it's still a challenge even though I have this practice, but it's one that I readily face now and start off Instead of trying to feel, run away from it and not feel what I feel. Right. It's okay to feel what I feel.

Speaker 2 - 14:20

It feels much worse when I'm trying to run away and avoid it. And I think I said that, I talked to you about that. It gives me something to do, learning about myself. That's what this is about. Learning ourselves about ourselves and accepting ourselves. And then when you have that, then praise and blame, gain and loss, all these things can come and go, but you're not, you don't. It doesn't stick to you know, you're not grasping and holding on to them for just some identity or something. You're not grasping on to them as some out of neediness. Right, so. So you two are the new ones, right? Because I know the other and you're new also, comparatively. Yeah. So. But I've been with these three here for a bit here, and they probably heard my feel, but I, I think it's a.

Speaker 2 - 15:39

I need to hear it myself. So I'm, you know, I have to. That's what I meant by saying. I get swayed by work too. I need that reminder. And so what I do is at 5 o'clock or whenever I get off, I immediately turn to the practice, you know, try to remind myself I do it in the morning and I do it in the evening. And then I try to remember as much as I can during the day. So what you guys learn in meditation doesn't just belong in meditation, Right. It's practice for the real world. So when you're disturbed with yourself, right. When you get upset, think of it as practice. Oh, okay. Because that's gonna happen in the real world, right? You know, so you get to practice that you can pay attention to it. So there's good and bad. You don't.

Speaker 2 - 16:35

It doesn't necessarily need to be everything good, but you want to try to find out what. You know, I used to get upset with my ex wife. I was, I'm a kind of guy that's like, oh, I want to clean the house and I want to turn the music on and I want to dance. You know, I want to feel real good. And then like, you're making too much noise, turn that stuff off. You know, just kind of squashing, you know, my spirit. You know, I felt like my spirit was squashed. And so then I get depressed and blue and go the other way. Right. And that happens so often. And I was, you know, I'd get upset with myself. It's not on those people, you know, people Are. Are gonna. They're. They're just like us.

Speaker 2 - 17:28

They're gonna express what they like and don't like and, you know, they want, so. But sticking like, you know, being vulnerable and allowing them to change the way I feel. Right. A lot, you know, they can't really change the way you feel, but I would, you know, there's. Is like blaming them for the way I feel, felt, instead of me watching out for myself. Right. So it's up to meet life. I can't manipulate life to fit, you know, my needs. Right. One of 7.5 billion people on this planet. It's not going to be. It's not here for my benefit. So trying to turn to more to understand that and fit in with that as what we need to do if we want to be happy, joyous, and free. So anyway, so do you guys want to meditate? Any questions?

Speaker 2 - 18:49

Anybody feel blue or somber by this? By what I'm talking about? Okay, that's good. This is just the way it is, right? So it's not like it's some. I think there's a finding a way to get to promote a healthy mind. A good mind with the proper outlook is what this is. Our view kind of sets in motions a lot of things. So if we see ourselves as victims of life, then we're going to experience life as a victim. But if we take responsibility for our own minds, then that sets in motion some qualities that. It's like we have to buttress up our force. Like there's a dike, right. That keeps the water out, right. So we build up our strength. It's like we go into the gym, you know, to get your muscles strong, right?

Speaker 2 - 20:02

So you're doing the same kind of thing when you. And you do that because you want to be. You want to live, right? You want to be, feel good, right? So you go to the gym for that same reason. Right. And the same thing with meditation is that you want to exercise your mind and to strengthen it. Right? So, okay. Is there any trepidation to that? Okay. But I hope not, because. So one of the things that, I mean, I do talk about meditation being following your breath and then being anchor in your body. That's. That's kind of like home base. But we can be. We. We don't. We don't necessarily have to take that approach. We can be open to our experience.

Speaker 2 - 21:09

So if we can just sit here and quiet for a minute before we meditate, and let's just withdraw our attention and just be present and see what arises and then we'll naturally let that flow into a meditation here. So don't try to necessarily do anything and watch what your mind is doing as you do this. So the practice of meditation is also giving something to mind to do, Right. So if nothing comes up that interests you, then finding something that you can interested in. That's why I like to talk about the breathing and really getting into the breathing, looking for sensation in the breath, just this awareness of your breathing. Noticing the sort of cool air coming in with the mask, it's not as cool as it normally is.

Speaker 2 - 23:18

This paying attention to what the mind is interested in, let it inform you, not with a judgment. So if you notice yourself judging in any kind of way, be aware of that. This practice is awareness. Knowing the way things are and this recognition and allowing nature kind of presents right the way it is right now. If you're finding difficulty getting interested in the breathing, then again just noticing this mind that doesn't want to be corralled, it's okay. You can allow it to be what it is. Just this noticing, paying attention to the sensations you feel. Noticing if the sensations are pleasant or unpleasant. If need be, you can count breaths. That's a technique that can help you stay focused. Starting with one and going up to 10 and then coming back down.

Speaker 2 - 26:52

But you can also let this awareness of what's going on just be intuitively flow. Just this paying attention part. Being aware of sounds, noticing the things that you perceive, being aware of like planning or whatever the mind is doing. You can look right at what the mind is doing. This looking is the key. Paying attention to the knower, the listener, the one that to wear. Remember, you're just. You're collecting data. So however, whatever you're experiencing right now is this is the data you're collecting it. As you turn this attention to this knower, it becomes stronger. This, this ability to be mindful becomes stronger as you turn towards it. Keep bringing the mind back. If you can get one breath in, that's great. Try to get two in. It's right. My, my breathing is a little compromised tonight.

Speaker 2 - 39:16

But what it reminded me though is that when we have our. When we meditate, we have to kind of. We have to accept whatever is there, however, is going on. Right. And for a while there I was really. When you go on extensive retreats, you really want to be able to breathe well, right? Because all of a sudden you'll struggle, right? Breathing is kind of like central to living, right? And so when your breathing is compromised, you can struggle a bit. But actually that was actually a good thing for me to experience that and go through that same thing with. I had back pain. I have body pains. I have different struggles that have just come up in my practice over the years.

Speaker 2 - 40:21

And there was a period of time where I was really emotional, where I was having a lot of motions coming up. Whenever I had taken it. I tried to mention this data collection thing because as you just experience whatever you're experiencing, you're actually getting practice dealing with difficult things. That's what I was trying to mention before, right? So you're getting to practice with emotions coming up. You're getting, you're practicing with dealing with pain. You're getting to practice with being distracted. You're getting practice with, you know, your mind being negative, you know, I'm saying. And this idea of knowing what's going on and trying to. Paying attention to the knowing part of it can give you that. That gives you a little separation from what's going on, right?

Speaker 2 - 41:28

So if you're aware of what's going on, then you're not completely lost in what is happening, right? Because you're aware of it. So that awareness is your freedom. You can strengthen that and it becomes that. It has its own momentum. So mindfulness, we're talking about here just in meditation right now. And maybe you can only be with one breath at a time, right? Which is great. You're there for one breath. Meaning if you have the expectation that you can meditate deeply and go and do all this great stuff with your practice. It's not necessarily about that, about being able to just be with whatever is. Because that skill is going to be in meditation. You're going to be able to deal with that in real life too, right? It's going to come up in real life.

Speaker 2 - 42:34

So you'll have like, for instance, I'm dealing with pain. Pain is going to come up in the world, and I'll be able to use that experience in how I relate and deal with it to give me be a source of strength for when it comes up in life. That's what I say. Meditation and life, they. They're intertwined, right? So you understand what I'm saying, trying to say here, or is that. I'm sorry, do you understand what I'm. When I'm. When I'm saying this, what I mean by this? I'm so hard of hearing. Okay, so you can't hear me? Okay, all right, no problem. So I'm Just asking it to the group. Am I. Is it. Is that kind of clear? Yeah. Okay. All right. Thank you. That's all right. I just wanted to make sure. Nobody's saying anything.

Speaker 2 - 43:23

So it's kind of hard for me to gauge where. If you're getting, you know, if there's anything you need that I can give you know, I can help you with. So thank you for that. So I'm just talking because I. I'm. I want to. I'm trying to relate, you know, and just convey things to you that might be helpful. You're gonna have days where you're gonna be peaceful and you're gonna have days where you're totally distracted. And that's what I'm just saying. It's okay. Whatever is the practice is to. To not have it, to be a certain way, because life isn't just gonna. That's not how life is. Life is going to come however it comes. And for us to be able to be with it, however, whatever mood we're in, whatever. You know, the pain body.

Speaker 2 - 44:16

I don't know if you guys know about Eckhart Tolle. He talks about the pain body, Right. You know, whatever is going on with you, this awareness, to meet it. To meet it head on and allow it. Actually, when we do that, we kind of give it permission to just be. To leave, to go on, to pass away on its own. A lot of times what happens is that something will be happening and then we're unknowingly giving it fuel, giving it more energy to persist. Right. I call it ringing the bell. Right. I think I said this last time. When you have the wound and you pour salt in it, or you keep itching it, right? You have an itch and you just keep on itching it. All of a sudden then you have. You've made it into a fest.

Speaker 2 - 45:09

A bigger problem than it was originally. It's just, you know, so.

Speaker 1 - 45:20

This is really good for me. And a lot of what we're doing is body awareness. I can be conscious of my thoughts, trauma stuff.

Speaker 2 - 45:41

Right.

Speaker 1 - 45:42

But just. I could be conscious of them, but they're not consuming me. And at the same time trying to be aware of the tension I feel in my body while that is still there.

Speaker 2 - 46:01

Yeah, There's a lot of aspects to our experience, and we end up getting caught into our identification with those things. Instead of seeing the whole picture of what's going on and exactly what you're saying, if you're able to watch it, then it's still there, Right. But there's other aspects to it going on that we turn away from. So that we turn away from those things, and we can use those things. We can actually influence those things. So first say something. Some. Something comes up and you're tight, right? You can bring some compassion to yourself. You can relax it, right? You can purposely bring some attention to the body and foster that there's a mind body connection. You can allow it to relax and be with it, and then it doesn't persist. I mean, it just goes on its own.

Speaker 2 - 47:09

So a lot of what worry is the same thoughts over and over and over and over and over again, right? And when you get caught in worry, then you're kind of feeding that worry, right? But if you can look at it and noticing that you're worried and this is hard, but if you can notice that, then you're not feeding it anymore. It's just running on its own. And then you could. Then. Then it has its own momentum. It's still, for instance, like anger. If you have some anger, when it comes in, there's a rush of hormones and the tightness and the anger may go away, the emotional anger, but you still feel it in the body for a few minutes after that.

Speaker 2 - 48:02

And a lot of times what happen is that we'll start all of a sudden, then we'll judge that we'll look at the body and we say, oh, I'm still angry, right? And then that's what I'm talking about reading. Faint, ringing the bell. Then all of a sudden you're like, oh, I'm angry. And then you have a judgment on it, and then you're feeding. See, that's how you were feeding it. So instead of noticing what's going on and noticing, for instance, PTSD having something, some memory of something that wasn't pleasant, and then continuing to relive that memory and being with it and allowing it to. To do whatever it needs to do to go on, right? There are people, I know that they've lost their parents, like my wife's brother, right? They lost their mother many years ago, 25 years ago.

Speaker 2 - 49:11

He's still bringing up, you know, that. You know, he's still living that. And it wasn't a very nice way she died, right? And he's still reliving that. So he's still being tortured by that memory. And in fact, it was. He got killed by a teenager driver, right? And my wife went and confronted the guy and actually forgave him, and so she let it go you know what I'm saying? And then he who is avoiding it's persisting in him and so torturing him. So same event, not very good event, but two different outcomes based on this whole idea of how we're approaching and how we're perceiving life and how we're dealing with it. It. So, and then when we can do that, then it doesn't have as much power. It dissipates things.

Speaker 2 - 50:19

We think we want things to go away immediately, but they don't go away immediately. They slowly dissipate if we don't feed them. If we feed them, then they get stronger, right?

Speaker 1 - 50:32

So found myself getting really angry at myself for feeding, you know, memories, the bad stuff, the trauma.

Speaker 2 - 50:47

That'S the pet.

Speaker 1 - 50:49

Yell at myself, I'll stop this over and over again. But the I'm going to, in that dangerous society, right, and getting a little bit better about just, okay, I can remember this, I'm aware of it. But my body, at the same time, I could try to relax my body a little bit.

Speaker 2 - 51:19

So why don't you take the another approach? Try to just allow it.

Speaker 1 - 51:24

Allow it.

Speaker 2 - 51:25

It's here. Don't fight it. Allow it. Give it room to express itself, right? So we can be full of grief, right, and be what I was telling you about, being authentic with it. It's when we resist that we make it stronger. When we don't like it, when we're, you know, when we're trying to push it away, we don't want it to be there, then that's when we feed it. But if we just allow things, then they will just take up their own, right? Everything does, nothing persists. Nothing does, nothing persists. And the only reason why it would persist is because some condition that is allowing it to persists, right? So we want to stop feeding that by turning to this watcher, right? This knower of what's going on is the one that knows it is not. It's not affected by what it's experiencing.

Speaker 2 - 52:35

It's the one that knows what it's experiencing, right? So you can tune into that. And then that's a protection. I like to call it a protection, right? So you can allow, you know, fully. Just, just allow it. You're not gonna. I used to, when I, I used to feel my emotions would come up, I thought they were gonna kill me, right? And then when I had my panic syndrome and I had these things coming and I couldn't do anything about them, they didn't kill me. And then when I realized, oh, it's okay for them to come up. And then another one came. And then another one came. You're saying once I did that allowing, then everything came and I wasn't holding on into anymore. And guess what? Pains in my body reduced.

Speaker 2 - 53:27

I was more happy and joyous and free as a result of, you know, this allowing and letting go. So that's exactly what.

Speaker 1 - 53:44

Colin is trying to take me feel like I'm making no progress.

Speaker 2 - 53:51

Yeah, it could take years. See again data, you know, it could take years and it can be, you know, just here and gone. We don't know. Things have their own life. So. Right. The expectation and wanting it to be different, that's where we get caught in to reaction, being reactionary. Right. And just instead of just allowing things. Yeah, there's a. Yeah, there's a thing called the two. There's a teaching on two darts. Okay. And I've talked about it here. So the painful memory you can't do anything about, right. The beating yourself up because you have the memory is where you want to. What you want to try to not prevent what you want to try to prevent because it's that beating yourself up, that's our disease. Right? Right. So that's what we want to just. We want to watch out for. That's what's optional.

Speaker 2 - 55:12

Pain and suffering is here. It's going to happen. It's just the nature way of life is the suffering as a result of that is optional. And that's what we're trying to work on. So it's not like we're going to eliminate unpleasant things in our lives. That's the nature of living. That's the nature of being born. Right. But expecting it to be different, that's delusional in a way. Right. So we want to face the fact that. Because then that's acceptance. When we accept things, then we deal with them differently. Right. So we don't want to doubly suffer over what's already there. Okay. I kept you guys long today. So that's it for today. I'm here, back in the groove again. Tuesdays, Fridays and Sundays. And I hope this is beneficial.

Speaker 2 - 56:41

Practice, you know, try, you know, practice by being aware of what's going on as much as possible. Just turn to what's going on. You can practice with it. Nobody needs to know you're doing it. Right. You know, I'm saying this is an inside job. Nobody needs to know, you know, and just practice it and. And you'll end up finding out that you're mindful in a lot of situations that you're surprised about. Right. It's just paying attention and being aware of what's going on instead of getting lost in it. Okay. I'll sign your things if you guys need me to. You're welcome. They still haven't put me on this thing, I believe.

Speaker 1 - 57:40

Oh.

Speaker 2 - 57:43

You're welcome. Wow. You're welcome. You're welcome. Thank you. You're welcome. Are you okay? Oh, yeah. It's been a day. Okay. And I cheered you up, didn't I? All right, well, you take care. I hope you're. You're well. Okay. I'm going to create a new one because they don't ever put me in here. Well, there's one right here. Where's that? Meditation? No, that's medication. That's what I'm saying. Meditation is not medication. Sometimes I need my readers. No, there's a. There's a bumper sticker that says, meditation, not medication. I like that. Yeah. Thank you. You're welcome. Hang in there, okay? If this is your first time or you're new to it, hang in there. Okay. There, you know, it's. It's gonna sink in and then you're gonna understand to be real. You know, it's a.

Speaker 2 - 58:48

It's a lifelong talk process that you're learning to pay attention to now. You're welcome. Be kind to yourself, please.

Speaker 1 - 58:57

How many times have you heard sought through prayer and medication?

Speaker 2 - 59:02

Oh, yeah, that's a fun. Yeah, I've. Many times, actually. It's. I like a little bit of. There's a na. They talk about Rule 62. You know, I love. I actually like that. And I have actually adopted that because I figured that, you know, notice a couple things in recovery when there's pictures, that means it was a happy time. If there were no pictures, that means it was pretty bad. Right? So that was one. And the other thing is thinking about being happy. Right. So not being a glum all the time is on me. Right. So trying to be light and make light of things and not take things personally. So it's actually a. Not taking things personally is actually a very spiritual practice, by the way. So if you are, then great, you have something to practice. Right.

Speaker 2 - 01:00:00

Everybody's taking everything personally, believe it or not. Right. Everybody is. Right.

Speaker 1 - 01:00:11

Spirituality has always been hard for me. I get a grasp off, you know, grip on it.

Speaker 2 - 01:00:18

Slips it away. Yeah, well, but the thing is that what brings us back is our own suffering. Right? So that's what brings us back to practice. Right?

Speaker 1 - 01:00:31

Yeah.

Speaker 2 - 01:00:33

Right. Right. It is. It is. I know. So that's the reminder. Use that as your reminder to come back to practice. I will. Yeah.

Speaker 1 - 01:00:41

If.

Speaker 2 - 01:00:42

Hey, you can be happy. Joys of free, our life with no suffering. Great.

Speaker 1 - 01:00:46

I think that's asking for a lot. If I could just be okay, you.

Speaker 2 - 01:00:51

Know, I'd be all right. Right. And that's. Right. And that's. That's where I'm at with it. Because I'm not. I can never be what I expect myself to be. Right. So just hang in there. I just. I just love that this practice gives me something actually to do, you know? I mean. And I think that's important. It's like, I don't feel like I'm a victim of life so much, you know? My wife has got dystonia. I've got Penn Pain problems, and nothing I could do about it. Right. All right. You're welcome. I'll see you on Friday.

Speaker 1 - 01:01:36

I'll be here.

Speaker 2 - 01:01:36

Great. Great. Great. Looking forward to it. See you, sir. What's your name again? Tom. Andy. See you, Tom.
