

Journal 6-9-2025.m4a

Meeting date: June 09, 2025, 07:28 am

Overview

- High altitude camping trip completed on June 9, 2025, with significant physical adjustments noted at 7,500ft elevation, including crankiness and fatigue by day four.
- Experience of gradual improvement in physical strength and adaptability reported by the end of the camping trip, suggesting acclimatization benefits.
- No caffeine withdrawal symptoms reported, indicating effective management of caffeine intake during the trip.
- Increased hydration theorized to potentially decrease headache frequency, suggesting a link between dehydration and pain sensitivity.
- Current reading of 'More than Allegory' by Bernard Cutsup explores the value of myth and traditional writings across various cultures, highlighting their relevance in personal and collective belief systems.
- Discussion emphasizes that recognizing both mythical and non-mythical belief systems is essential for personal growth and understanding of absolute truths.
- The meeting reflects on how meditation practice triggered critical thinking around recurring head issues, influencing hydration hypotheses.
- Notable distinction made between mythical traditions, which create deities, and non-mythical traditions like Buddhism and Vedanta, stressing diverse perspectives on spirituality and belief.
- Importance of integrating both mythic and rational perspectives discussed as necessary for comprehensive decision-making and validation of truths.
- Collective insights from the meeting stress the need for ongoing self-reflection and adaptation, especially in challenging physical or mental conditions.

Notes

- High Altitude Camping Experience and Physical Adjustments (00:00 - 01:30)

- Camping trip in the desert with quest folks completed on June 9th, 2025
- High altitude adjustments documented at 7,500ft elevation
- Physical symptoms didn't manifest until day four (Sunday morning) of the trip
- Timeline: Thursday arrival through Sunday departure
- Mind and body experienced crankiness and easy fatigue at elevation
- Gradual improvement and strength building observed by the fourth day morning
- Diet and Hydration Insights (01:30 - 02:28)
 - Caffeine intake assessment - no additional caffeine needed, no withdrawal headaches experienced
 - Meditation practice triggered reflection on recurring central head problems
 - Hypothesis that increased water consumption might reduce headaches
 - Theory that slight dehydration lowers pain threshold, making minor issues feel more significant
- Reading and Philosophical Reflections (02:28 - 04:20)
 - Currently reading 'More than Allegory' by Bernard Cutsup
 - Main theme explores the importance of not ignoring myth and traditional writings
 - Discussion encompasses Christian traditions as well as indigenous and Native American traditions
 - Distinction made between mythical traditions (creating Gods) and non-mythical ones (Buddhism, Vedanta)
 - Key concept that belief systems are important for moving forward and validating absolute truth
 - Emphasis that non-mythical doesn't mean purely logical or rational

Action items

- Unassigned
 - Drink more water during the day to see if headaches diminish, as slight dehydration might be lowering pain threshold and making minor problems feel bigger (02:28)
 - Continue reading 'More than Allegory' by Bernard Cutsup to explore themes about myth, traditional writings, and belief systems (02:28)
