Okay, so this is a germ general journal update. Got a couple things on my mind and yeah, caught between kind of where I'm See, I'm caught against my own internal judgments of things and the. And what. How my. The practice of what I believe to be the practice of taking a view independent of external things. And intriguingly this means also to my external being, my own thinking. And I don't know, maybe I question this whole Buddhist principle that the mind is. Or that yeah, the. The mind is another sense. The mind being a sense sphere, a something that we can sense. When I say this out loud, I know it to be true, but at the same time I believe that it is separating the mind from the higher mind, the consciousness from the mind is a tricky place.

Speaker 1 - 02:11

So regardless of that, there's this one of me that has this understanding of. Of how I'm looking at the world as being my responsibility versus my instinctual responsibility, which coming back to being intuitive awareness and knowing. My intuitive awareness and knowing also has these judgments. So I think. And so without beating around the bush too much, I want to just say that specifically talking about some of my. Of the behaviors that I've been observing with my. With my wife, with my spouse, my partner, and that I've been pointing out, but that like last night, this may seem petty, but she wanted us to watch this movie and this has been happening more than once. So when I say this is not a standalone thing. She has been sort of dictating the movies. I mean, there's certain things I'm. It's acceptable about for me.

Speaker 1 - 03:43

So trying to find that is. Is. Has been. Is. Is fairly narrow and. But immediately when we start watching the movie, she starts falling asleep. And then midpoint of the movie, she wants me to turn the movie down. And then a few minutes later after that, you know, and I snapped at her with that one and I said, you know, I told her, why don't you just go to bed if you're, you know, if you're tired, you know, don't get upset that they're. Anyway, and then few minutes later then she wanted to pause the movie and end it and we could watch it some other time. And that really got me pissed off also because really my time doesn't seem to really matter much. So. And this has happened a few times and there's other, you know, ways that this comes up.

Speaker 1 - 04:58

We'll be watching YouTube. I'll be watching YouTube because that's my time when I get off of work that I come usually I come in and I check, catch up with what's going on and sometimes I'll go off and explore. But once she has an agenda of what we should be, you know, what she wants, then it's like, can we, you know, she'll, you know. So yeah, maybe that is something, you know, and that's something I understand. It's on me. But you know, why am. You know. And what's annoying is it's like when it's the other way though, if she's doing something then she gets annoyed at me if I try to interact with her. So it's just, it feels like it's just a one way street here. So that is frustrating with me. And, and it's also playing out in the cars.

Speaker 1 - 06:00

So she, you know, there on the car situation. Yeah, I feel much more comfortable when I'm driving for sure. And so I have been working to let go of that concern I have. And so maybe these are just normal marital things and I'm not here to completely. I mean there's a lot, there's other things that overlook maybe, you know, and I'm saying this out loud that, but you know, I'm just talking about the major interpersonal ones here. It's very controlling. You know, I'm, you know, I'm still working and I'm at my computer desk and then she's there wanting to know when we're gonna go for a walk. So I, I appreciate that. I like that. But it's just another like do this, do that. I gotta, you know, when are you gonna do this? When you do that. And I'm, it's.

Speaker 1 - 07:43

I'm not a machine. I'm not completely habitually or maybe this is my habits, you know, but it's like a drill sergeant at times it feels so it, this pressure is just ramped up with you know, all the external crap going on too, which I'm not going to go into that. There's a lot. And yeah, it's, you know, you can't just turn off the world. You can't. Yeah, you just. And, and that's a fine then. That's, that's the issue. That's the problem here is that the world is going to, I mean I don't want to just turn off the world because I live in the world and I can't just think about me. But that's all I end up doing here. I end up doing so because I'm not taking any action to help.

Speaker 1 - 09:36

Maybe that's a, you know, that's what, you know, I know that some. One of the reflections I have that's been, I believe, to be true is that when you're. When something bothers you take some action, you feel better about it. You know, especially with something like interpersonal, like forgiving somebody, that's. That's a great thing. You know, being generous, it's a great thing. But that also applies to any. Any disturbance. You know, there's only certain actions that you can take. You know, what can you do about certain things? So, you know, what can you do about it? And if you can't do anything about it, then you have to let it go. And then that. That's. I guess that's where the point is. Why I'm talking about this is getting to that point of letting go.

Speaker 1 - 10:50

There's a letting go out of wisdom, and there's a letting go out of despair. Some things I could do with wisdom, some. And it's almost easier in a way, to do it out of despair. So, speaking of despair, I've got to, in this, go to work, try to get my car to the shop. I have my own things I gotta handle, duties that I have no choice but to do. All right. It.
