Okay, so this is a quick note on. I think that one of the things I've been running into is where I have an idea about, say, the Dharma. And then others mention things, counter that. Then how do I address that in my mind without feeling inferior, superior or, you know, somehow it's wrong? So I thinking of the honeyball sutta. That is a way that if there's nothing to delight in, then that wouldn't come across my mind. So very interesting is that through wisdom, you know? Yeah, that's a. It's a. That's a good thing to. This is part of the whole sake titty thing when you. We just take things on face value and don't add anything to it.
