So just thinking about being inspired by some of the things that bring the. The mind turns towards when it's not caught up in its traps of whatever doubt or anxiety and worry and hate. No disliking. You don't like the word hate. Disliking when you're not caught in, self absorbed into that and the mind turns elsewhere. Very grateful that, you know, kindness actually helped me. I think me being kind and so generating for me, but still in the state of, you know, anxiety because of the state of the world. And then, but then I came to music. You know, I avoided music at one point because it could be annoying.

When you're just caught up in your annoyances, music can be annoying, but there's that grace that can come from a little bit of quietness, a little bit of openness to recognize the good feelings that music can provide. So my mind has been getting creative with that, you know, creating some kind of playlist of music that inspires me that I don't share with others. Prior to the rain on a Sunday, some of the stuff I've run into today on Reddit, one person shared that they, that you know, they done all the work for enlightenment. And finally once you get there, it's not this kind of disappointed, this extended state of bliss. Now I don't know if, I mean I can reread it, but this state of bliss expect 24 7. I don't think that was ever what the promise was.

People are coming here in a second, so I may end up pausing this. Dogs, people, dogs, birds. Yeah. So the, and you know, that's, I guess that's the end goal is enlightenment. What helps us along is having a state of bliss, a well being feeling well being. Because why would you do it if you didn't feel like you're getting better? But that a certain point. Yeah. Well, you know, I was also thinking about karma today. I shared earlier, it's like, yeah, what am I doing? How am I approaching things? What are my actions? What am I really putting my efforts into? How, what is my perspective to that? Do I have a healthy perspective? Am I struggling with it? Yeah. Back to these hindrances that I think I was alluding to earlier.

You know, how we're stuck in them, can be stuck, easily caught easily. But this path of practice, these paths of practice are so many different ways to connect in a way you can use that based on how wherever you're at the time, there are also things that you can develop, you know, so both short term and long term. So just looking back to this whole thing of about karma again, you know, and my efforts, what my perspective, what are, what conditions are catching me. So. Yeah. What are these paths of practice, the non dual Buddhist teachings, Krishnamurti, Muji, Rupert Spira. Yeah, kind of proud of myself. Well, hey, motivation. I got motivated to go and walk when that was totally not where my hair was at today. So grateful that motivation did arise.

It's funny, this egret, I guess is an egret or a herring. Big. It's a white herring. Has been traversing around the neighborhood, two different areas in front of my house just in the last hour. So this, I'm writing this down or dictating this to use as a for to explore, not only to teach others, but really for me to deepen and reflect on in my personal practice.
